

I feel that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen the protection provided me by the indiana telephone privacy law. Since I have been covered by Indiana's law my life has been much more plesent. I get almost no junk calls. I am a 27 year little league volinteer 16 as player agent. I am the one who has to respond when the more elderly members of my family call. So you see not answering my phone when it rings is not realy an option. It has always been my position that if telemarketing is legal no is representing me. There is no such thing as a courtecy call. I am the customer if I want something from a company I will call them. The Indiana Telephone privacy law works. If you want to create a national regulation Indiana's Telephone privacy law should be the minum starting point. Fines against corporations are nice but jail time for CEOs would be better. Please protect me don't dilute the protection I already have.
